In November 1939, after 200 Pacific crossings, Empress of Canada was requisitioned for trooping. On 1 March 1943, she left Durban with about 1800 people on board, including 400 Italian prisoners of war and 200 Poles who had been released by the Soviet Union after Germany invaded. On the night of 13-14 March 1943, she was torpedoed twice by the Italian submarine Leonardo da Vinci about 400 miles (640 km) south of Cape Palmas and sank within 20 minutes after the second attack. There were 392 fatalities: 340 passengers, including a majority of the Italian prisoners, 44 crew and 8 gunners. The survivors were taken to Freetown and, from there, resumed their trip to England on Mauretania.

Died 29-Nov-1943 aged 24

Leading Aircraftman 539725, 220 Sqdn., Royal Air Force, United Kingdom

Grave or Memorial: Singapore Memorial Singapore, Column 426

Son of Ernest and Annie Mary ALDERSON of Darlington, County Durham, born in 1919.

As a member of 220 Squadron RAF, he had left the Clyde in Convoy DMI in November 1941, bound for the Middle East. Because of the situation in the Far East, the convoy was diverted and half went to Singapore, while the remainder, including 220 Squadron, landed in Java. LAC ALDERSON was taken prisoner when the combined British/Dutch force surrendered to the Japanese in March 1942. Along with his fellow RAF personnel he was sent to Ambon Island, off the coast of New Guinea, as part of an airfield construction force. The work being completed in November 1943, some 1000 Allied prisoners of war were embarked on the Japanese ship Suez Maru en route back to Java. In direct contravention of international law, the Japanese failed to identify the Suez Maru as a prison-ship and it was sunk off Bali on 29 November by an American submarine, the USS Bonefish, which identified it as a legal target. Over 350 prisoners of war, including Joseph ALDERSON, perished. LAC ALDERSON has no known grave, but his name is recorded on the Singapore Memorial.
